Children don't learn one reading-related skill and then move on to the next in a step-by-step process. Instead, they must develop competency in four areas simultaneously: word identification, comprehension, fluency, and motivation. They begin to develop these competencies by listening to books read aloud.

Introduction to Reading. Reading is a complex developmental challenge that we know to be intertwined with many other developmental accomplishments: attention, memory, language, and motivation, for example. Reading is not only a cognitive psycholinguistic activity but also a social activity. Being a good reader in English means that a child has gained a functional knowledge of the principles of the English alphabetic writing system.

Technically, reading is the process of gaining meaning from print. For some, reading is a passion - an avenue to which they can turn, to escape the challenges of life - a place where their most terrific fantasies can come true. For others, it's a tedious chore, where nothing makes sense and even reading a small sentence requires a mammoth effort. The reasons for children not being able to read are varied - poor teaching, lack of motivation or the child may have a learning disability which ...

An introduction to lipreading. I'd like to talk to you about lipreading. Lipreading can be very, very useful and can help us to make better use of what we are hearing therefore we hear more effectively. You know what I mean: "I hear better when I've got my glasses on." This is because I'm lipreading and I think that we all do this naturally.
